Physical Networks Become What They Learn
By Vijay Balasubramanian

Interacting physical systems, like neural networks in the brain, folding proteins, and self-modifying electrical circuits, can learn diverse tasks. In this talk, I will discuss how learning leaves architectural imprints: the structure and dynamics of networks adapt by aligning with tasks they perform. In this way, physical networks become what they learn.